Continuation of 11, does NOT place the application in condition for allowance because:

In response to the applicant's arguments directed towards the rejection under 35 USC §101, the arguments have been considered, but are not deemed persuasive. The applicant states "it is clear that the storage module is the structure that stores to content and that it must at least comprise a tangible physical storage location in which content may be stored". However, the applicant's specification discloses something different. "In one embodiment, the plurality of client devices 110 and the server 130 include instructions for a customized application for cantuling and storing content related to an event." See page 8, lines 6.8.

In response to the applicant's arguments that "the Chang reference fails to disclose '4t least one attribute related to the even matches at least one attribute related to the content, wherein the attribute is not a time or a date", the arguments have been considered, but are not deemed persuasive. Any events that are on a calendar are related to the user that owns that calendar. If a user's camera is used to capture content of an event, and the user identifier is later used to find the calendar of that user, the event and the content both have the user attribute in common.

In response to the applicant's arguments that the claim requires searching for an event without using a time and date, the arguments have been considered, but are not deemed persuasive. The applicant has clearly used the conjunction "o" in the claim language. "O" is used as a function word to indicate an alternative. If the searching is done without one or both of date and time, the statement is logically true.

In response to the applicant's arguments directed to the Shiota et al. and Van De Sluis et al. references, these references were not used in the rejection. These references were provided to the applicant so that the applicant was aware of other known prior art while making any amendments so that the prosecution history can be as effective and compact as possible.
